

The flow chart below shows the procedures to get a driving license in US.

Write a report for a university lecturer describing the information shown in the diagram.

Summarize the information by selecting and reporting the main features, and make comparisons where relevant.

The given chart demonstrates the process through which one can get a driving license in the US.

There are three main challenges standing between student drivers and their license. After filling the related forms and registering at a driving license center, they need to take a test devised to assess their visual acuity. Since the ability to see properly is of high importance in driving, failing the test leads to getting disqualified from the rest of the procedure. Conversely, passing the test would get them to the next stage in which they should pay the fee and take a written exam. Unlike the other two, one is allowed to retake this test for two consecutive times in the event of failure. Finally, attendees who passed the former test need to put all they have learned so far into practice on the road. Only after succeeding in the practical evaluation can they get their license. Otherwise they have to pay the fee again and go through the consequent stages.
